PHOTOGRAPHIC DIARY 1999
FAY STEVENS*

In a similar vein to my photographic diary in 1998 I again decided to keep a visual diary as a pictorial narrative of my response to the landscape of Leskernick Hill and Bodmin Moor.

I have enclosed a photographic diary, taken along the same lines as diary A in 1998. An image taken every day at afternoon tea break, unframed and as much as possible unbiased. As site photographer this year, it illustrates my movement around the moor and the luxury of taking afternoon tea breaks ! I therefore decided this year therefore to locate the image with a brief explanation of where the image is in relation to the hill as an indication of my movements and the location of other people on the site (some people are quite territorial as to what trench and with whom they work!)

The following panels of photographs are a collection of images that I hope illustrate my personal response to the landscape of Bodmin Moor and in particular Leskernick Hill. This year I have presented the images into a number of themes. I have attached descriptions of these themes to some of the sets of photographs, however once again the descriptions are brief as the intention, as before, is that the images to speak for themselves.
